Hamilton teachers receive national awards

Two outstanding teachers from Hamilton will be honoured with ASG National Excellence in Teaching Awards (NEiTA) for making an impact in their local communities.

Stu Green and Suzanne Lois Ings are among 20 regional recipients to be awarded the prestigious honour, selected from just under 300 nominations throughout New Zealand.

Celebrating 20 years of rewarding excellent teaching, ASG NEiTA gives parents, grandparents, school councils and board committees the opportunity to formally recognise hard working and innovative teachers who inspire a passion for lifelong learning in young people by accommodating different needs and nurturing their talents.

Mr Green from Hauraki Plains College always wanted to be a music teacher and his diverse program gives students opportunities to develop their interests in music forms, including choirs, jazz and stage bands, and Rockquest. A key school innovation was the building of a recording studio giving students the opportunity to record and release their own original music.

Ms Ings from Ngutunui Enviro School teaches to create a world that is rich in possibility; a place that is positive and always moving with opportunity. She also sees teaching and learning as an integrated process where students and teachers co-create a world of excellence and wonder, while respecting each other and being honest.

ASG NEiTA Chief Executive Officer, John Velegrinis says community recognition is very powerful and they should be proud of the impact they're making at the grassroots level and beyond.

"Communities love being engaged in education and in some cases, they can be the richest educational resources. So I congratulate Mr Green and Ms Ings for really making a difference in their Hamilton communities through education. We say that education is one of the most critical investments that parents, families and communities can make, but we need teachers like our ASG NEiTA recipients to drive this education and really invest in nation building through our young people.

We also know from the ASG Parents Report Card that 89 per cent or nine out of 10 New Zealand parents believe their children's teachers are very capable. This support for teachers doesn't surprise us and further validates the value of teachers in our society."

The awards comprise of early childhood, primary and secondary categories.

ASG NEiTA chairman, Allen Blewitt says the awards also highlight the positive relationships which have been built.

“ASG NEiTA is one of the only channels where the community gets to express their gratitude through nominating an inspirational teacher, educator, principal or centre director. We are also celebrating 20 years of ASG NEiTA and these awards go from strength-to-strength because of the influential community-teacher-pupil relationships which can last a lifetime.”

In September 2016, ASG NEiTA will announce the national award recipients. Professional development and project grants are available at the national award level.
